To whom it may concern,

Having recently attending a meeting regarding fees for water licencing, I as a primary producer was concerned about the never ending introduction of ways and means of grabbing money from a sector that is already facing enough challenges.

We are top heavy in the public sector and its time to understand that the private sector can not continue to sustain the growth in this area.

As primary producers we battle extremes of weather, market conditions, both domestic and international as well as land rates, insurances, vehicle licencing, and state and federal taxes. Our input costs such as fuel and power are crippling, enough is enough.

What we really need is a far leaner public sector that costs us less to maintain, cut our silk to suit our purse.

Regards,
Paul vines.
